

HERBERT MUSEUM
THE PAVANES

The Herbert Museum in London is a collection of 18th-century portraits, including the Pavales. The collection is housed in the Herbert House, which was built in the 17th century. The portraits are arranged in a series of rooms, each dedicated to a different artist or subject. The Pavales are a group of portraits that were painted in the 18th century. They are named after the artist who painted them, Pavales. The portraits are of various sizes and are arranged in a series of rooms. The Pavales are a collection of portraits that were painted in the 18th century. They are named after the artist who painted them, Pavales. The portraits are of various sizes and are arranged in a series of rooms. The Pavales are a collection of portraits that were painted in the 18th century. They are named after the artist who painted them, Pavales. The portraits are of various sizes and are arranged in a series of rooms.

The Pavales are a collection of portraits that were painted in the 18th century. They are named after the artist who painted them, Pavales. The portraits are of various sizes and are arranged in a series of rooms. The Pavales are a collection of portraits that were painted in the 18th century. They are named after the artist who painted them, Pavales. The portraits are of various sizes and are arranged in a series of rooms.

Portrait of a man in an oval frame, wearing a red and blue coat.

Portrait of a woman in an oval frame, wearing a blue and red dress.

Portrait of a woman in an oval frame, wearing a yellow dress.

The Pavales are a collection of portraits that were painted in the 18th century. They are named after the artist who painted them, Pavales. The portraits are of various sizes and are arranged in a series of rooms. The Pavales are a collection of portraits that were painted in the 18th century. They are named after the artist who painted them, Pavales. The portraits are of various sizes and are arranged in a series of rooms. The Pavales are a collection of portraits that were painted in the 18th century. They are named after the artist who painted them, Pavales. The portraits are of various sizes and are arranged in a series of rooms. The Pavales are a collection of portraits that were painted in the 18th century. They are named after the artist who painted them, Pavales. The portraits are of various sizes and are arranged in a series of rooms.